Submission Text:	I have a child with idiopathic anaphylaxis. He is allergic to some sort of additive and preservative but the medical profession is unable to figure out which ones exactly. So many of our foods are unnecessarily laced with these ridiculous substances in order for profiteering, but in complete disregard for the health and well being of the people who consume them. How dare you! You should be ashamed of allowing more and more of these substances to

be used in and on our food. You should be pushing to lower their prevalence, Again, how dare you take fresh fruit and vegetables and turn them into yet another food source that my child may well inadvertently react to with anaphylaxis. Fresh fruit and vegetables are staples in our household, and almost everything else comes in the form of single ingredients so that we can prepare them ourselves. What have you let happen to our food supply chains, in the name of longer shelf life, but at the cost of shorter human lives?!?! NO MORE!
